Style Compass with Larry Laslo

Marcia Sherrill

He not-so-fondly remembers his hometown as "a steel town where they all thought I was from the moon. Oddly enough no one in my family had any taste." When he was just a boy, Laslo went on to ask his poor mother, "why is this house so ugly?"

Required Reading

Books: Tony Duquette by Wendy Goodman and Hutton Wilkinson

Annie Kelly

With a steady stream of magazine articles, and even a season of Gucci ads, which used Dawnridge, his fantastical Beverly Hills house, as a backdrop, Duquette has finally been recognized as an extraordinary and inventive Californian designer who is still a big influence today.
